1. Effective 16 June 1953, the Ruegenhafen project was discontinued, except for winding-up work and work for the preservation of sites which [redacted] would still take between 6 and 8 weeks.¹ All permanent buildings and low wooden buildings were scheduled to remain and, according to an order by the Ministry of the Interior, were later to be used as civilian dwellings. It was planned to complete the road construction, but all work in the water, including jetties and the refuge harbor, was to be discontinued effective 16 June. Earth work on the canal from Glowe as far as Jasmund-Bodden was also to be discontinued, except for work on embankments which were to be flattened to an angle of 1 : 0.6.

2. [redacted] although the work on the Ruegenhafen project had to be discontinued, the project was not entirely abandoned. [redacted] the work would be continued in conjunction with the second Five-Year Plan in East Germany at a later date.²

1. [redacted] Comment. Winding-up work had to be completed on orders of the Ministry of the Interior not later than 31 August 1953.

2. [redacted] Comment. Information on the discontinuation of the Ruegenhafen building project was previously submitted. [redacted]

. It is interesting that the project was allegedly only temporarily suspended, rather than completely abandoned.
